INTRODUCTION

The overall research of this course is concerned with understanding the impact one's trust in their most-trusted parent has on one's trust in self and most-recent romantic partner.

The following were analyzed:

- The relationship between one's trust in their most-trusted parent and trust in one's self.
- The relationship between one's trust in their most-trusted parent and trust in their most-recent romantic partner.

METHODS

A quantitative methodology was used by distributing a survey to collect data on trust in one's most-trusted parent, trust in self, and trust in one's current romantic partner.

Variables:

- Trust in Most-Trusted Parent
- Trust in Self
- Trust in Most-Recent Romantic Partner

Factors of Variables:

- Taking on the role of the other
- Power structure
- Time
- Communication and response
- Value orientation

RESULTS & CONCLUSION

- There is a weak, but significant, relationship between one's trust in their MTP and trust in one's self.

- There is no relationship between trust in one's MTP and trust in one's most-recent romantic partner.
